

3. Language Notes: Asking and answering questions in Chinese

Chinese, Part 4: Talking about your family

A very common kind of question to ask is one with a YES or NO answer. But in Chinese, there is no one word for YES or NO. Let's look at some ways of answering:

Question	YES answer	NO answer
Nǐ shì lǎo dà ma? 你是老大吗? Are you the eldest?	Shì de. 是的。 I am.	Bù shì. 不是。 I'm not.
Nǐ qù tā jiā ma? 你去他家吗? Are you going to his house?	Qù. 去。 I am going.	Bù qù. 不去。 I'm not going.
Nǐ yǒu yí gè gē ge ma? 你有一个哥哥吗? Do you have an older brother?	Yǒu. 有。 I have.	Méi yǒu. 没有。 I don't have [one].
The question depends on the verb: shì, qù, yǒu.	To answer YES, simply repeat the verb. The particle de can be added for emphasis.	To answer NO, put a bù in front of the verb. If the verb is yǒu, put méi in front.

There are different ways of asking questions with YES/NO answers:

1. By adding ma 吗 to the end of a statement:

Question	YES answer	NO answer
Nǐ shì lǎo dà ma ? 你是老大吗? Are you the eldest?	Shì de. 是的。 I am.	Bù shì. 不是。 I'm not.

2. By adding a "tag" to the end of the statement. A common tag is duì ba? 对吧 meaning "right?"

Question	YES answer	NO answer
Nǐ de yé ye nǎi nai zài Melbourne zhù, duì ba ? 你的爷爷奶奶在墨尔本住, 对吧? Your grandparents live in Melbourne, right?	Duì. 对。 That's right.	Bú duì. 不对。 No. (not right)
Tā yǒu yí gè jiě jie, duì ba ? 他有一个姐姐, 对吧? He has a sister, right?

3. By providing answer choices in the actual question. You include both the positive and the negative forms in the question:

Question	YES answer	NO answer
Nǐ shì bù shì lǎo dà? 你是不是老大? Are you the eldest or not? (Are you or aren't you the eldest?)	Shì de. 是的。 I am.	Bú shì. 不是。 I'm not.
Tā yǒu méi yǒu yí gè gē ge? 他有没有一个哥哥? Does he have a brother or not? (Does he or doesn't he have?)	Yǒu. 有。 He has.	Méi yǒu. 没有。 No, he hasn't.
Nǐ xǐ huān bù xǐ huān hē chá? 你喜欢不喜欢喝茶? Do you like drinking tea or not?	Xǐ huān. 喜欢。 Yes, I do.	Bú xǐ huān. 不喜欢。 No, I don't.
Nǐ yào bu yào qù Běi jīng? 你要不要去北京? Do you want to go to Beijing or not?	Yào. 要。 Yes, I do.	Bú yào. 不要。 No, I don't.

This way of asking can sound blunt in English, but is very acceptable in Chinese.